

Adventurers... What a day! BRLA stands for....

Boxer Rescue Los Angeles

...which is where I spent my afternoon :-)

The story begins here, looking out my Los Angeles office window (I was working there during the week)... Bonaventure Hotel...

...and although I could stay there (across the street) I stay at the Standard Hotel (an exciting story, for another time).

Below: I don't usually get "meals" while in a hotel. but my Range Chicken (Standard Hotel) was truly awesome...

Fab chocolate decadence...

But I digress... On the way home (I-5) I saw the Penrose exit which I knew led to BRLA and oh-yes this being Saturday...

...the boxer-volunteers were out in full force :-)

Below, another pic of the volunteers (approx 20 total volunteers on a Saturday)...

Below, I had stopped to make a donation. My previous dog (Buddy-the-boxer) was lost in my divorce (snif). Later, I had foster-cared for (blind) boxer Cheeto...

Cheeto: The Little Blind Boxer With A Big Heart

I had to take a boxer for a walk! And I met Rubie...

...who was hyper-energetic at first, but quieted quickly.

Note (above) in the background is Pharaoh who is a really big boy, very mellow, and newly-arrived at BRLA.

Pharaoh is below, he won't stay an orphan for long...

I must emphasize that Pharaoh is a really handsome, perfectly-built boy. He looks "growly" in the pic, definitely not! Also, he is gentle with little kids and might end up in the home of the little girl.

Caution: Animal shelter volunteerism can be habit-forming!

And heart-breaking. You cannot adopt them all :-)

All week, the doggies live in their cage (yes, cleaned-daily). But there is no "daily walk" (weekends only, 30-minutes max).

Rubie (below) was a real barker when I found her. After making my donation to BRLA, I took her out of her cage...

...and wow we bonded instantly :-)

Rubie is a sweetheart! I decided that I needed a win-win in my life...

- 1) In March, when my life smooths out, I'll adopt her (I win)
- 2) By March, she will be adopted (I win)

All I care about is that Rubie gets a good home :-)

My last pic is below, thanks for reading along!
