

Adventurers! Today we explore little-known facets of the "Adventurers lifestyle". These are...

- 1) Washing muddy bikes and...
- 2) Fixing broken-things

The best part of being an Adventure Host is knowing your guests go home "fulfilled"... Never once doing any of the mundane stuff like visiting the bike-wash, which means connecting-the-trailer which used to be way-hard but now is super-easy since I added this crank/wheel thingie...

When the trailer is mounted to the car, I must remove the trailer caster-wheel to prevent it from hitting things. This is easy!

Here we are at the 25-cent car wash (well, $2 in quarters). You might call this place "dumpy" but the owner has another word for it... Goldmine!

What I saw was "Joe Average" dumping-in $4 in quarters.

Here's the dried-muck on my bikes...

and...

...and...

Yeah I know "enough with the dried-mud already". Funny none of my guest-riders ever said that ☹ ☹ ☹. They say ("yell") things like...

Mud! WooHoo! (splash)

OK, just one more mud-shot...

Now, when you get in line, "paying attention" is the key. Note the guy below. Taping the seams on his living-cab. This guy is going to be here for a loooong time, best not to follow him...

Blast away!!

Home-again, home-again, jiggety-jog ☺ ☺ ☺ ☺...

Next week, back to wrenching, replacing a guest-smashed brake-pedal w/this new one ($42... Fear not, I will extract compensation from the guilty party... U-know who you are! Lobster @ Nicky's!...

Ah well... Continuing on to Laguna Beach (to see a play tonight, West Side Story) I took Louie to the Bark Park...

Louie is now sleeping at my feet, fair-reward to me for the pleasure of his company.

Thanks for reading along! Paul P.
