

Easter Sunday! A fine day, MG suggests "4wd off-road exploring"...

First stop: The back-door to a mysterious canyon...

Below, coming up via the "back door"....

We knew the road would become impassable, so no-surprise, we stopped here...

MG seems happy... "Exploring is so fun!"

The below ruts stopped forward progress (again no surprise, we knew this obstacle was there)...

What we're going to do is turn around, then back-track to the access-road that runs to the very top/edge of the cliff above MG...

Below, we made it!

From the below overlook, we could see where we stopped earlier, on the "green flat" area...

MG took the below pic. This is where we could have gone back down into the canyon. The far steep/twisty turn is OK for the truck going down, but impossible coming up...

MG "inspects the corner"...

...and here's the truck, which was flawless after reducing the tire air-pressure from 40psi to 28psi...

MG wants a readership-vote...

MG...

...or PP...

Who is better at "projecting the macho image"?

Easter dinner! Superbly prepared by MG after our grueling adventure!

Thanks for reading along!
